Miss Reilson's Death. Miss Neilson is well known, we might in fact say calebrated, on the other side of the channel, where here successes at the theatre have given her a great popularity. Married ex remely young to Mr. Lee, Adelaide Lillian Neilson was divorced from her busband, whose name, naturally, she then ceased to bear. She was a great and beautiful woman of exquisite accomplishments, who appeared to be much less than 29 years of age, which her certificate of birth ascribes to her. All the habitues of the Bois have seen her frequently pass in her grand landau, making every afternoon the tour of the ake before returning to the Continental Hotel. Miss Neilson, who adored Paris, came here as often as possible. Upon the last occasion she brought with her a lady's companion, a secretary and a maid. At the Continental Hotel she councied rooms Nos. 149, 150, 165 and 166. Oa Saturday, according to her habit, Miss Noilson went to the Bois. She had with her her two attendants and a neighbor in the hotel. Mr. Collington, who lived in No. 167. She was entirely dressed in white, and wore a straw hat trimmed with lace. She stopped for a moment at the dairy of the Pre Catelan, where she took a cup of milk. It was the cold milk which made her sick. As we have said in our Conseits, that delightful drink is sometimes very dangerous, especially in summer. However, that may be, at the end of a few minutes the young lady was in a state of suffering. She ordered her coact man to stop, and descended at the Nouveau Chalet du Rond Royal. She entered and asked for a parlor to rost in. They gave her one on the first floor, farnished with a sofa, a side table and a dining table. She stretched herself upon the sofs, where her attendants arranged the pillows under ber head, and then asked for some tea. It was then 3 30 p. m. The cap of les, mixed with brandy, which she took, not having alleviated her pain, as she hoped is would, Miss Nullson made them bring her some tilled. The pain in her stomach became more and more violent and was accompanied with nervous fits and a desire to vomit. By the advice of the people who ed the sick lady the proprie the Nouveau Chalet, M. Lefay, sent for Dr. Monnier, who prescribed ca:aplasms on the chest and a continuation of the tilled. Miss Neilson seemed for an instant benefitted. But, toward 9:30 o'clock a new crisis occurred. more violent than those preceding. Miss Neilson implored the attendance of the doctor of the Continental Hotel, Dr. Gantilion. They hastened to his house, Rue du Mont Thabor, No 12, and brought him in the landau. He gave at once a prescription. The remedy prescribed was in the form of pills. Miss Noilson took two of them. There was again a period of relief.— Then as it was evident that Miss N ilson could not be taken back to her lodging, because they could not life her without causing her new pain, they placed a mattress on the sofa in order that she might pass the night there. The maid. worn out by farigue and excitement, stretched herself at ber side in order to take some rest. Toward midnight there was a new crisis, more terrible than any of the preceding. A prey to the most terrible agony, which nothing coul i relieve. The unhappy lady twisted herself about in convulsions, tearing off the upholstery had just breathed her last sigh, twelve hours after the first attack.

M. Lejeune, commissioner of the Neuilly pome, heletale, commissioner of the freulty police, was at once informed. He came in the morning accompanied by the official physician, and, after the narration of the circumstances of the death, they decided that an autopys was necessary, and that the body should be taken to the morgue. The transfer took place under particularly heartrending circumstances. The body of the young woman was shrouded in a sheet and rolled in a packing cloth, and was then tied up and placed in a wagon, where it was scarcely concessed from the public view. Then two carters and an agent of the police mounted the wagon and departed. It was then at 4 o'clock in the afternoon, that Miss Neilson, who had come to the Bois in her magnificent landau traversed the whole of Paris to the morgue. Miss Neilson lived at London, in Victoria street. A telegram was sent thither to inform the different members of hir family of the fact of her death. Admiral Glyn, who is living at this time in Paris, hastened to the Chalet and arrived there just as they were taking away the body. The grief of the old man was ex-treme Like a man demented he caressed the furniture that poor Miss Neilson had seen and touched for the last time. He could scarcely be from the sofa. They ran again to call Dr.

Monnier, but some time was necessary to awake him, to allow dress and to bring him to the Chalet. When he arrived at 3:30 a m., Miss Neilson torn away from the parler. The autopsy was made by Dr. Brounardel. His verdict was that t was a natural death. Opening and Closing of the Mails.
